

In this Edition:

SpyGate

Congress Removed Ban on Funding Neo-Nazis

Biden's Handlers Prepare to Eject Him

The Stupid Will Believe It

Colorado USEIP Report is Here

Moira Greyland: Pedophile Parents

Trump Sues Clinton

National Counterintelligence

Michael Parenti on Conspiracy Denialism

Online at: coloradopatriots4action.com/patriot-press

PATRIOT

Edition 2, Volume 5 May 2022

SpyGate 101: A Primer On The Russia Collusion Hoax

BY: MARGOT CLEVELAND, MARCH 18, 2022

As Special Counsel John Durham continues to expose more details of the “SpyGate” or “Russia collusion” scandal, it can be difficult for any apolitical, non-news-junkie member of the public to grasp the ongoing developments.

After all, for more than five years, the corrupt legacy media has refused to report on scandal or done so with a slanted portrayal of the facts. So most Americans remain unaware of the Democrats’ years-long duplicity that sought to destroy first candidate and then President Donald Trump. Add to that reality the overlapping conspiracies and sprawling cast of characters involved, and it can be difficult to follow the story.

That the scandal is dense, however, does not mean it should be ignored. To the contrary, the duplicity must not be disregarded because what Trump’s political enemies tried to accomplish over the course of five years represents the biggest threat our constitutional republic has seen in the last century.

So for those who care about our country and her future but don’t want to be buried in the minutia of the scandal, here is your big-picture primer.

DNC Emails Are Hacked

While every thread of SpyGate could be unraveled more, April 30, 2016, marks the cleanest point to pin the start of the intrigue. It was then, amid the contested presidential primaries, that the Democratic National Committee learned that its computer network had been breached. The DNC then hired a company called CrowdStrike to investigate the hack, and by mid-May, CrowdStrike concluded that Russian actors were responsible for the hack, which the DNC then reported to the FBI.

The public first learned about the DNC server hack on June 14, 2016, when The Washington Post broke the story. Then, on July 22, 2016, after Trump and Hillary Clinton had been declared the presidential nominees, WikiLeaks released a trove of documents, purportedly obtained through the DNC hack.

These documents included emails in which then-DNC Chair Debbie Wasserman Schultz and other party officials disparaged Clinton’s primary opponent, Bernie Sanders. The behind-the-scenes communiques also revealed that the DNC, which should maintain neutrality between primary candidates, favored Clinton, with top officials plotting ways to harm the Sanders campaign.

Clinton Campaign Plots to Convert DNC Scandal into Trump Scandal

The timing of WikiLeaks’ release of the DNC emails couldn’t have been worse, with delegates poised in Pennsylvania to officially nominate Clinton the Democratic candidate for president. But by Sunday evening, the Clinton campaign had devised a strategy to respond to the scandal: blame it on Trump.

“I’m Jake Tapper at the Democratic Convention in beautiful Philadelphia, where the state of our union is exposed emails just published by WikiLeaks showing Democratic Party officials actively discussing possible ways to sabotage Bernie Sanders, even as they were insisting publicly that they were staying neutral during the primaries,” the CNN host opened the video segment that launched the Russia collusion hoax.

Continued on page 2

SpyGate, Continued from page 1

Tapper introduced Clinton's then-campaign manager Robby Mook, asking him the campaign's reaction to the leaked emails. After responding that the DNC needed to "look into this and take appropriate action," Mook pivoted to Trump, premiering the Russia conspiracy theory that would consume the country for the next five years.

"What's disturbing to us," Mook began, is that "experts are telling us that Russian state actors broke into the DNC, stole these emails, and other experts are now saying that the Russians are releasing these emails for the purpose of actually helping Donald Trump."

Mook continued:

"I don't think it's coincidental that these emails were released on the eve of our convention here, and that's disturbing. And I think we need to be concerned about that. I think we need to be concerned that we also saw last week at the Republican Convention that Trump and his allies made changes to the Republican platform to make it more pro-Russian. And we saw him talking about how NATO shouldn't intervene to defend — necessarily should intervene to defend our Eastern European allies if they are attacked by Russia. So I think, when you put all this together, it's a disturbing picture. And I think voters need to reflect on that."

When Tapper asked Mook for evidence to support his claims, Mook cited unnamed experts and press reports "that the hackers that got into the DNC are very likely by to be working in coordination with Russia."

"If the Russians in fact had these emails, again, I don't think it's very coincidental that they are being released at this time to create maximum damage on Hillary Clinton and to help Donald Trump," Mook reiterated.

"It is a very, very strong charge that you're leveling here," Tapper interjected. "You're basically suggesting that Russians hacked into the DNC and now are releasing these files through WikiLeaks to help elect Donald Trump."

Again, Mook deflected to "a number of experts," saying, "Experts have said that it is the Russians that, in fact, went in and took these emails. And then, if they are the ones who took them, we have to infer that they are the ones then releasing them."

Clinton Campaign Co-opts the Russia Collusion Hoax

While the Clinton campaign introduced the Russia collusion hoax on the eve of the DNC convention to convert the Sanders' scandal into one about Trump, the strategy also proved a perfect response to the second Clinton scandal — this one involving Clinton's illegal use of a private server during her time as secretary of state.

The New York Times first broke the news on March 2, 2015, that Clinton had used a private email server to communicate as secretary of state under President Barack Obama. Two days later, the Select Committee on Benghazi subpoenaed any Benghazi-related emails contained on the private server. Upon learning of the document request, a technician for Clinton's computer service provider deleted approximately 30,000 of Clinton's emails, which she claimed were personal emails.

By May of 2016, the State Department's Office of the Inspector General had released an 83-page report condemning Clinton's use of the server. Coverage of this report stressed that the State Department had "deemed more than 2,000 of Clinton's messages as classified, including 22 that were upgraded to the most sensitive national security classification, 'top secret.'" At the time, the media also noted that "the FBI is still probing whether any laws were broken laws by putting classified information at risk — or whether her staff improperly sent sensitive information knowing it wasn't on a classified system."

The Clinton campaign tried to downplay the FBI's involvement in the private-server scandal by framing it as "a security inquiry," but in response to questions about that characterization, then-FBI Director James Comey said he was "not familiar with the term 'security inquiry,'" stressing "the word investigation" is "in our name."

"We're conducting an investigation. ... That's what we do. That's probably all I can say about it," Comey concluded.

At a press conference two months later, on July 5, 2016, Comey announced that the FBI had completed its investigation and that while Clinton's handling of classified information was "extremely careless," he had referred the matter to the Department of Justice with a recommendation that no charges be filed. Comey took this same position when he testified before Congress, there calling Clinton's conduct related to the server "sloppy."

Although Comey publicly declared the investigation into Clinton's private server closed, when Democrats gathered for their convention in Philadelphia, her campaign continued to face questions about the scandal, with Tapper drilling Mook about Comey's conclusion that Clinton's use of the private server had been "sloppy." Mook quickly changed the conversation to "this election" and what "voters are looking for and asking about in this election."

Two days later, though, the media took Mook's lead and converted the Clinton server scandal into a scandal about Trump. A July 26, 2016, opinion article for USA Today, titled "Putin for President 2016," opened with an acknowledgment that Clinton's "secret private-server emails are almost certainly already in the hands of Russian intelligence," and concluded, "Putin can embarrass Hillary — or worse — whenever he wants."

"We're getting a small foretaste of that in the release of hacked Democratic National Committee emails," the piece continued, speaking of the DNC officials engaged in "dirty tricks aimed at Bernie Sanders" and "getting awfully chummy with some allegedly professional journalists." And with that, the media converted Clinton's use of a private server to a story about Trump and Russia's supposed backing of his candidacy.

From then on, the Clinton campaign and a complicit media framed any concern over her use of a home-brew server and any questions about the details buried in the DNC emails not as a scandal about Clinton but as a conspiracy between Trump and Vladimir Putin.

Clinton Campaign Pays for and Peddles Fake Trump-Russia Evidence

By the last week of July 2016, the Russia collusion diversion controlled the narrative, and Democrats repurposed every question about the DNC hack or the sever scandal as an opportunity to peddle it.

Similarly, Clinton's team converted every comment by Trump, even tangentially related to Russia, as further evidence of a conspiracy. Likewise, her campaign framed every Russia connection, past or present, between Trump, his business, his family, or members of his campaign as concrete proof of collusion.

While the Clinton campaign had not gone public with the Russia-collusion angle until July 24, 2016, when Mook marketed that theme on CNN, it had been collecting supposed intel on Trump's connections to Russia for some time.

Continued on Page 3

SpyGate, Continued from page 2

In the first half of 2016, Perkins Coie, the law firm that represented the Clinton campaign, had hired private investigation firm Fusion GPS to collect opposition research on Trump. In turn, Fusion GPS hired Christopher Steele in May or June of 2016 to focus on Trump's connections to Russia, and by June 20, 2016, Steele had drafted the first of some 17 memoranda that would eventually compose what is now known colloquially as the Steele dossier.

Steele shared his initial memorandum — which contained claims that the Kremlin had blackmail material on Trump, including the salacious and false “golden showers” accusation — with an FBI contact on July 5, 2016. Over the next six months, Steele continued to craft the dossier, relying primarily on an unnamed “Primary Sub-Source,” now known to be Russian national Igor Danchenko.

Danchenko, who has since been indicted for lying to the FBI, is also alleged to have invented some of the supposed intel contained in the dossier. Danchenko also fed Steele false information about the Trump campaign, which a Clinton booster had invented and then passed on to Danchenko.

The bottom line some five-plus years later is that the dossier consisted of a few publicly known accurate facts and a litany of false claims concocted by Danchenko and others and then sold by Steele and the Clinton campaign as the work of a former MI6 Russian expert.

The Steele dossier represented but one aspect of the invented evidence of collusion. The Clinton campaign also paid Perkins Coie lawyer Michael Suss-mann for his work in crafting, with the assistance of various tech experts, a report purporting to show that the Trump organization had established a secret-communication network with the powerful Russian Alfa Bank.

Additionally, computer scientists who had worked with the Clinton campaign's attorney “surveilled the internet traffic at Trump Tower, at his New York City apartment building, and later at the executive office of the president of the United States, then fed disinformation about that traffic to intelligence agencies hoping to frame Trump as a Russia-connected stooge.”

As Steele, Fusion GPS, and other Clinton backers created fraudulent reports, they, along with the Clinton campaign and her lawyers, exploited their relationships with reporters and government officials.

Steele and/or Fusion GPS's founder Glenn Simpson shared Steele's memoranda with various news outlets. They also fed the supposed intel to members of the law enforcement and intelligence communities, including representatives in the Departments of Justice and State. After the FBI fired Steele as a source because he had spoken with the media, it arranged for him to continue providing his reports to the FBI by having him meet with a Justice Department attorney instead.

This dual-prong approach resulted in a public saturated with circular confirmation of Trump-Russia collusion. Outlets parroted the false details fed to reporters by Steele and then referenced the FBI's investigations into the same matters to create the appearance that the investigations confirmed the validity of the leaks. Simultaneously, the FBI used media reports as a basis to confirm Steele's supposed intel.

Obama Admin Spies on Trump Campaign Under Knowingly False Pretenses

On July 31, 2016, the Obama administration and the FBI launched an investigation into the Trump campaign, branded “Crossfire Hurricane.” While to this day, the FBI maintains it opened Crossfire Hurricane after U.S. officials learned from an Australian diplomat that young Trump adviser George Papadopoulos had bragged “that the Russians had dirt on Hillary Clinton,” former Attorney General William Barr and Special Counsel John Durham have both questioned that account.

The Obama administration's targeting of the opposition party's presidential campaign came just as the Clinton campaign began publicly pushing the narrative that Trump was colluding with Russia to interfere in the 2016 presidential election. And the opening of Crossfire Hurricane came three days after then-CIA Director John Brennan briefed President Barack Obama and other senior national security officials on intelligence alleging “that U.S. Presidential candidate Hillary Clinton had approved a campaign plan to stir up a scandal against U.S. Presidential candidate Donald Trump by tying him to Putin and the Russians' hacking of the Democratic National Committee.”

Brennan's briefing also noted that intelligence agencies had obtained intel indicating that on July 26, 2016, Clinton approved “a proposal from one of her foreign policy advisors to vilify Donald Trump by stirring up a scandal claiming interference by Russian security services.” In early September 2016, a U.S. intelligence official would forward an investigative referral to the FBI regarding “Clinton's approval of a plan” about “Trump and Russian hackers hampering U.S. elections as a means of distracting the public from her use of a private mail server.”

Even with this foreknowledge of the Clinton campaign's plot to frame Trump, and even while watching the execution of the plan in real time, the FBI moved forward with Crossfire Hurricane. The FBI would also later use Steele's fraudulent reporting to obtain four court orders from the secret FISA court to surveil a former Trump campaign volunteer named Carter Page.

While Page was no longer connected to the campaign when the FBI obtained the FISA surveillance orders, the warrant allowed the FBI to access prior correspondence between Page and the Trump campaign, as well as any communications Page continued to have with individual campaign members. Further, while FISA proceedings are secret, media leaks about the targeting of Page gave the press more material to further the Russia-collusion spin.

Accessing private campaign emails, however, represented but one aspect of the spying that took place under the auspices of Crossfire Hurricane. The FBI also tasked a Confidential Human Source (CHS) with questioning Page, and that CHS “sought specific details from Page related to the Trump campaign, and fed Page unsolicited (and potentially illegal) advice concerning campaign strategy.”

The FBI used the same CHS to question Sam Clovis, a senior member of the Trump campaign. In a recorded conversation, the CHS posed several questions about sensitive campaign strategies and concerns.

The spying on Trump's campaign also included the FBI using a private Trump security briefing as a possible opportunity to collect information for the investigation.

Continued on page 4

She wasn't “supposed” to Lose.

SpyGate, Continued from page 3

Investigation into Trump Continues During His Administration

Significantly, Crossfire Hurricane did not end with the 2016 election. Instead, after Trump defeated Clinton, the investigation continued and so did the leaks, with Comey giving Trump a briefing on the Steele dossier — a fact then leaked to give CNN a pretext to report on the Steele dossier.

After Trump's inauguration, the FBI hatched a plot to oust the president's national security adviser, again with the help of the media. Comey also began writing secret memoranda of conversations he had with now-President Trump. And after Trump fired Comey, the latter leaked those memoranda to the media through a law professor friend, triggering the appointment of Special Counsel Robert Mueller.

Mueller continued Crossfire Hurricane, retaining many of the original FBI agents. The country would later learn that many of those investigating the Trump campaign held rabid anti-Trump sentiments, when text messages exchanged by members of the Crossfire Hurricane team were made public. Other text messages went missing when several agents wiped their cell phones.

The public learned of even more malfeasance by the Crossfire Hurricane team when the DOJ's Office of the Inspector General released a 400-plus-page report concluding that the DOJ included 17 significant inaccuracies and omissions in the FISA application and renewals related to Carter Page.

These problems and others led then-AG William Barr to appoint U.S. Attorney John Durham to lead an investigation into Crossfire Hurricane, later naming him a special prosecutor.

As part of his investigation, Durham revealed additional misconduct in Crossfire Hurricane when he obtained a guilty plea from a former FBI attorney for altering an email related to the FISA case against Page.

Durham's team also obtained a statement from another FBI agent involved in the investigation named William Barnett. Barnett told DOJ investigators that there was never any basis for the bizarre "collusion" theory and that Mueller's office pushed prosecutions with a "get Trump" mentality. But even then, Mueller found no evidence of Trump colluding with Russia.

There are thousands more details already known and many more players involved — and that's before whatever else Durham may reveal. But just these basics provide all the information you need to understand SpyGate — and to see why it far surpasses the Watergate scandal.

<https://thefederalist.com/2022/03/18/spygate-101-a-primer-on-the-russia-collusion-hoaxes-years-long-plot-to-take-down-trump/>

Congress Has Removed a Ban on Funding Neo-Nazis From Its Year-End Spending Bill

Under pressure from the Pentagon, Congress has stripped the spending bill of an amendment that prevented funds from falling into the hands of Ukrainian neo-fascist groups.

In mid-December 2015, Congress passed a 2,000-plus-page omnibus spending bill for fiscal year 2016. Both parties were quick to declare victory after the passage of the $1.8 trillion package. White House spokesman Josh Earnest told reporters "we feel good about the outcome, primarily because we got a compromise budget agreement that fought off a wide variety of ideological riders." The office of House Speaker Paul J. Ryan touted the bill's "64 billion for overseas contingency operations" for, among other things, assisting "European countries facing Russian aggression."

It would be safe to assume that one of the European countries which would stand to benefit from the omnibus measure—designed, in part, to combat "Russian aggression"—would be Ukraine, which has already, according to the White House, received $2 billion in loan guarantees and nearly $760 million in

"security, programmatic, and technical assistance" since February 2014.

Yet some have expressed concern that some of this aid has made its way into the hands of neo-Nazi groups, such as the Azov Battalion. Last summer the Daily Beast published an interview by the journalists Will Cathcart and Joseph Epstein in which a member of the Azov battalion spoke about "his battalion's experience with U.S. trainers and U.S. volunteers quite fondly, even mentioning U.S. volunteers engineers and medics that are still currently assisting them."

And so, in July of last year, Congressmen John Conyers of Michigan and Ted Yoho of Florida drew up an amendment to the House Defense Appropriations bill (HR 2685) that "limits arms, training, and other assistance to the neo-Nazi

"It would be safe to assume that one of the European countries which would stand to benefit from the omnibus measure...would be Ukraine."

Ukrainian militia, the Azov Battalion." It passed by a unanimous vote in the House.

And yet by the time November came around and the conference debate over the year-end appropriations bill was underway, the Conyers-Yoho measure appeared to be in jeopardy. And indeed it was. An official familiar with the debate told The Nation that the House Defense Appropriations Committee came under pressure from the Pentagon to remove the Conyers-Yoho amendment from the text of the bill.

The Pentagon's objection to the Conyers-Yoho amendment rests on the claim that it is redundant because similar legislation—known as the Leahy law—already exists that would prevent the funding of Azov. This, as it turns out, is untrue.

Continued on page 5

Neo-Nazi, Continued from Page 4

The Leahy law covers only those groups for which the "Secretary of State has credible information that such unit has committed a gross violation of human rights." Yet the State Department has never claimed to have such information about Azov, so funding to the group cannot be blocked by the Leahy law. The congressional source I spoke to pointed out that "even if Azov is already covered by Leahy, then no there was no need to strip it out of final bill." Indeed, the Leahy law cannot block funding to groups, no matter how noxious their ideology, in the absence of "credible information" that they have committed human-rights violations. The Conyers-Yoho amendment was designed to remedy that shortcoming.

Considering the fact that the US Army has been training Ukrainian armed forces and national guard troops, the Conyers-Yoho amendment made a great deal of sense; blocking the avowedly neo-Nazi Azov battalion from receiving US assistance would further what President Obama often refers to as "our interests and values."

That neo-Nazis (or neo-fascists, if you prefer) are a distinctly minority taste in Western Ukraine, is clear and is not in dispute. Of late, however, there have been troubling signs that they may become a force to be reckoned with. According to The Jerusalem Post, in Ukrainian municipal elections held last October, the neo-Nazi Svoboda party won 10 percent of the vote in Kiev and placed second in Lviv. The Svoboda party's candidate actually won the mayoral election in the city of Konotop. Meanwhile, Radio

Free Europe/Radio Liberty reported in November that Azov operates a boot camp that exposes children to "the regiment's far right-wing ideology."

Whether White House spokesman Josh Earnest was referring, in part, to the Conyers-Yoho amendment as one of those "ideological riders" the administration fought to defeat is unclear. What is clear is that by stripping out the anti-neo-Nazi provision, Congress and the administration have paved the way for US funding to end up in the hands of the most noxious elements circulating within Ukraine today.

<https://web.archive.org/web/20160329143100/https://www.thenation.com/article/congress-has-removed-a-ban-on-funding-neo-nazis-from-its-year-end-spending-bill/>

Dan Bongino
@dbongino

IT'S THE JOE BIDEN SCANDAL! HUNTER IS ONLY A PIECE OF IT.

BioClandestine

THERE ARE NO US BIOLABS
IN UKRAINE!

Okay we have biolabs in Ukraine, so what?

Okay so maybe we were studying deadly pathogens in Ukraine,
but it was for defense!

We are very concerned Russia is going to find our biolab research. Poland plz help.

imgflip.com

US Media grappling with the message that exposes why they are FAKE NEWS!

The Authority ★★★

Americans are receiving a Constitutional crash course.

We are being shown how broken ALL of our systems truly are.

- >> Executive Branch serves special interests.
- >> Judicial Systems serves special interests.
- >> Legislative Branch serves special interests.
- >> Intelligence Systems serves special interests.
- >> Voting Right/System completely compromised.
- >> Public Education Systems indoctrinating children to the NWO curriculum.
- >> Heath Care / Big Pharma weigh holding treatments.
- >> News/Media is Fake.

We can go on forever about how broken our systems are here in America and around the world.

To think ALL of this crazy shit has to happen in order to spark a thought and feeling in the ones who have yet to wake up.

To think there are 4-6% that aren't ever going to get this speaks volumes to how evil the media and it's culture truly is.

Peace through strength and national pride is the solution to the endless wars and national shame. National repentance.

That's the goal.

Be the change.

56.5K The Author..., 10:55 AM

Biden's Handlers Are Preparing to Eject Him (& Kamala)

By Roger Kimball, March 20, 2022

I sense a disturbance in the force. In fact, I've been feeling the tremors for a while. Back in January, I wrote a column for American Greatness called "The Coming Dethronement of Joe Biden." In it, I noted that Biden's appalling performance as president would sooner or later—and probably sooner, given the ostentatious nature of his multifaceted failure—lead to his removal as president.

I should have added that it wasn't Biden's performance per se that would lead to his downfall. The problem, rather, was the way his performance was undermining his—and therefore his minders' and puppet masters'—political power. As Saul Alinsky, community organizer to the stars, noted, the "issue is never the issue." Accordingly, the people who put Joe Biden in power—I cannot name them, but I know they are the same people who keep him in power—do not care about inflation, rising gas and food prices, COVID lockdowns or mask mandates, the porousness of our Southern border, the threat of war with Russia, or the myriad other issues that worry ordinary voters. I am quite certain, in fact, that the word "voters" brings a vaguely contemptuous smile to their faces.

They are not troubled by the suffering of the people, indeed, they approve of a certain amount of suffering. Suffering produces dependency; and dependency, in turn, is like an insurance policy for those who cater to it: the bureaucrats who fill the troughs that feed the populace. The point, of course, was never to end the dependency but to manage in such a way as to perpetuate and expand it. Joe Biden is an errand boy, a figurehead, in the metabolism of this great (not to say Great Society) act of political legerdemain.

Back in January, I compared the conundrum that Joe Biden presented to The Committee that keeps him in power with the conundrum that Richard Nixon presented to the elites of his day. Nixon was hated by all the beautiful people of his day, but before he could be disposed of the elites had to address the problem of Spiro Agnew, who in his own way was nearly as preposterous as Kamala Harris. Fortunately for the anti-Nixon forces, Agnew was also corrupt in a pedestrian, easy-to-demonstrate sort of way. So all that the forces of light and virtue had to do was produce evidence of his glomming on to paper bags full of pelf in exchange for favors rendered and, presto, Agnew was history.

Kamala Harris is more of a problem. She is at least as appallingly incompetent as her boss, and no less challenged rhetorically, as her alarming performance in Poland and Romania a week or two back demonstrated. But Harris will not be as easy to shift as was Agnew. I have heard nothing about actual bribery, and acting as the warm bun for Willie Brown's bratwurst may be in dubious taste but is not actionable.

But Biden's—and Harris'—polls continue to crater, with 60 percent of respondents disapproving of the job Biden is doing, and 50 percent "strongly" disapproving. It's the worst showing yet, and many commentators are rubbing salt into the wound by stressing the adverb: We've been traveling down this road for months, they say, and so far every "worst yet" turns out to be tomorrow's "hold my beer" moment.

The last several days have been full of wonder at the New York Time's admission that, guess what, Hunter Biden's "laptop from hell" was not—as Joe Biden claimed—"Russian disinformation." Nope, everything that Donald Trump said to Leslie Stahl about it was true. Everything the New York Post said about it was true. Twitter and the rest of the regime media pronounced a damnatio memoriae on the Post and anyone who dared publicize the scurrilous story. The poor computer repair chap who found and publicized the dirt, political as well as sexual, on Hunter's laptop was hounded and driven into bankruptcy. (Remember Jonah Goldberg on that poor fellow? I do. "Wait you believe the computer repair shop story? Like at face value?")

The truth was there, staring everyone in the face. Remember Tony Bobulinski? He is the former Navy officer and businessman who was set to start a financial company with Hunter and Jim Biden, Joe's brother. As I noted at the time, just before the 2020 election Bobulinski demonstrated, with copious contemporary documentation, that various Chinese entities, all of whom—like all things Chinese—are ultimately answerable to the party, have invested heavily in the Bidens via various business enterprises of Joe's son Hunter. We are talking about tens of millions of dollars.

Now, why would the Chinese do this? Out of some misplaced humanitarian instinct? No, they did it in order "to capitalize on the Biden name." At the time, remember, Joe was vice-president of the United States. That was all that Hunter had to offer.

Continued on Page 7

General Flynn ★★★★★

Remember their names: These are the 50+ former "intelligence" officials who colluded to interfere in the 2020 election by signing a letter saying that Hunter's laptop was a Russian plot:

- | | |
|---------------------|-----------------------|
| James Clapper | Brett Davis |
| Michael Hayden | Thomas Finger |
| Leon Panetta | Roger Zane George |
| John Brennan | Steven Hall |
| Marc Polymeropoulos | Kent Harrington |
| John Sipher | Don Hepburn |
| John McLaughlin | Timothy Kilbourn |
| Michael Morell | Rick Ledgett |
| | Ron Marks |
| Doug Wise | Jonna Hiestand Mendez |
| Nick Rasmussen | Emile Nakhleh |
| Russ Travers | Gerald O'Shea |
| Andy Liepman | David Priess |
| John Moseman | Pam Purcilly |
| Larry Pfeiffer | Chris Savos |
| Jeremy Bash | Nick Shapiro |
| Rodney Snyder | Stephen Slick |
| Glenn Gerstell | Cynthia Strand |
| David Buckley | Greg Tarbell |
| Nada Bakos | David Terry |
| Patty Brandmaier | Greg Treverton |
| James Bruce | John Tullius |
| David Cariens | David Vanell |
| Janice Cariens | Mike Vickers |
| Paul Kolbe | Winston Wiley |
| Peter Corsell | Kristin Wood |

Nine further "intelligence" officials colluded with those listed above but decided to remain anonymous...makes these latter nine even bigger snakes.

Our system is rotted from the inside.

234.7K 4:25 PM

One of these men is a threat to the entire civilized world. The other is Russian President Vladimir Putin.

Klaus

©Brian Cates meme

Biden's Handlers, Continued from Page 6

All that information about Bobulinski came from an interview with Tucker Carlson. It was about the only place you could find his name. Searches for him on CNN turned up zilch: "search not found." We're talking about a week or two before the election. Everything not friendly to Biden was memory-holed. Hunter's laptop, of course, but also the evidence that Bobulinski produced showed that, contrary to Joe Biden's direct testimony, Joe did talk to Hunter about his business. In one communication, equity stakes for the new company are spelled out. Ten percent is to be held by "H"—that's Hunter—for "the big guy," "my Chairman," i.e., Joe Biden.

Which brings me back to the disturbance in the force with which I began. Why do you suppose that the New York Times has decided, finally, at this late date, to acknowledge that the story that the New York Post broke about Hunter's laptop was true? The Times, like the rest of the fake news establishment, like virtually all of social media, buried the story, screaming loudly that of course it wasn't true, of course it was Russian disinformation, mediated somehow by that consummate Putin puppet, Donald Trump. Fifty-one "intelligence experts," remember, signed an open letter denouncing the story and pronouncing anathema upon Donald Trump. Presented with evidence that they were wrong, every one of that disgusting crew—

John Brennan, James Clapper, and the rest of the anti-Trump deep state coven—refused to apologize.

Many people seem to think that the reason that the story of Hunter's laptop—which is just as much about Joe Biden's perfidy as it is about Hunter's perversion—has emerged now is because it can no longer do any serious damage. The election is over, Biden won—at least, he was declared the winner, which is not quite the same thing, although it does mean that he gets to live at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

But I wonder if there isn't something else going on. The news is full not only of stories about the New York Times fessing up, sort of, about the contents of Hunter's laptop, but also of stories about how Hunter is likely to be indicted for tax fraud. In one sense, that is not news. I wrote about it at the end of 2020 when Hunter announced, sotto voce, that he had been informed that he was being investigated by the tax authorities. But in another sense, I suspect, that news, like the revelation from the New York Times that, what do you know, all that stuff about Hunter's laptop was on the level, like Joe Biden's bizarre suggestion a couple of days ago that "everybody knows somebody" who has taken nude pictures of some lover and then used them to "blackmail" the person—all that has a different valence now that the Biden Administration is seriously underwater and there are no lifelines in evidence.

The issue is never the issue. I suspect that Joe Biden is being prepped for ejection. Exactly how it will happen I do not yet know. But he is on the threshold, or possibly has even passed the threshold, where he could appear to govern. His minders understand this. They must be the ones to replace him, otherwise they themselves risk being replaced, which would be intolerable. As I say, it's not entirely clear yet how the defenestration will take place. Obviously, Kamala will have to be dealt with first, and she will be. Look for some ground softening stories such as the Times just served up about the laptop. They won't be long in coming.

But it was, the Chinese wagered, quite a lot. Many thought that Joe Biden might be president, and it turns out they were right. It was, in short, "influence peddling of the grossest and most spectacular kind." As I said then, When influence is peddled, obligations are incurred. When obligations are incurred, favors can be expected. When the favors are owed, directly or indirectly, to the Chinese Communist Party, you want to be sure that the people in debt are not, you know, presiding over the government of the United States of America.

<https://amgreatness.com/2022/03/20/bidens-handlers-are-preparing-to-eject-him-and-kamala/>

It's May 2022 and Joe Biden is STILL not the President of the United States of America!

When someone is Proud of their TREASON we should help make them Famous!

We The Media ★★★★★
Forwarded from IET 17 ★★★★★ (IET 17 ★★★★★)

 John Sipher
@john_sipher

I take special pride in personally swinging the election away from Trump. You're welcome.

Maybe cowardly Dick forgot he blocked me for the last several years and only unblocked me to give me credit for swinging the election.

 Richard Grenell @RichardGrenell · 6h lol. He signed the letter saying Hunter's laptop was Russian disinformation.

CIA Officer Openly Confesses To Rigging 2020 Election For Joe Biden And Says They Would Do It Again

<https://en-volve.com/2022/03/28/bombshell-cia-officer-openly-confesses-to-rigging-2020-election-for-joe-biden-and-says-they-would-do-it-again/>

2000Mules.com

Safest
Election
In History

Don't claim "there's no evidence", when you're terrified to LOOK

What is it you THINK you know?

“THE STUPID WILL BELIEVE IT AND ASK TO BE TREATED” PANDEMIC TO DEPOPULATE 1981

August 16, 2021 by Martin Armstrong

Jacques Attali is a well-known French economist and social theorist. He has been a political adviser but also a senior civil servant, which is in itself a distorted term for they never see themselves as serving the people. We have simply been a herd of sheep to manage.

Additionally, Attali was a counselor to the French President François Mitterrand from 1981 to 1991 and was the first head of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development in 1991-1993 which I use to visit often. The building was outrageously expensive with a huge white marble slab on each floor as you got off the elevator. I had NEVER in all my years ever visited such a decadent public office anywhere in the world.

I use to do a lot of work in France. I was even a Keynote Speaker for the Bank of International Settlements at a luncheon in Paris with all the central bankers of Europe. And I was asked to debate political leaders in Paris on national TV – but they declined. When I say I have worked behind the curtain for decades, I am not making such a statement up out of thin air. One of the aspects I have always encountered in various meetings is very disturbing in today’s light. There is a French book entitled L’Avenir De La Vie (“The Future of Life”) by Michel Salomon, who is a journalist and doctor back in 1981, he interviewed twenty scientists including seven Nobel Prize winners, and which thus relates his conversation with Jacques Attali, who at the time was the adviser to François Mitterrand. In that interview, it provides a clear warning of how they look down upon us, the great unwashed, which is the blueprint for what they are doing using Covid-19 to change the world economically and politically.

“In the future it will be about finding a way to reduce the population. We will start with the old, because as soon as he is over 60-65 years of age, man lives longer than he produces and costs society dearly. Then the weak and then the useless who do nothing for society because there will be more and more of them, and especially finally the stupid ones.

Euthanasia targeting these groups; euthanasia will have to be an essential instrument of our future societies, in all cases. Of course, we cannot execute people or set up camps. We will get rid of it by making them believe it is for their own good. Too large a population, and for the most part unnecessary, is something economically too expensive.

Socially, it is also much better for the human machine to come to a screeching halt rather than gradually deteriorating. We won’t be able to give intelligence tests to millions and millions of people, you can imagine!

We will find something or cause it, a pandemic that targets certain people, a real economic crisis or not, a virus that will affect the old or the big, it doesn’t matter, the weak will succumb to it, the fearful and the stupid will believe it and ask to be treated.

We will have taken care to have planned the treatment, a treatment that will be the solution. The selection of idiots will thus be done by themselves: they will go to the slaughterhouse on their own. “

“...the weak will succumb to it, the fearful and the stupid will believe it and ask to be treated.”

“The future of life” – Jacques Attali, 1981, interview with Michel Salomon.

This book is currently out of print. Perfect coincidence. This road map to tyranny is well known. The Press will not report the truth nor Big Tech because they all assume that they will be part of those selected to remain. Indeed, society is nothing but a herd of sheep. They know very well that the majority “will go to the slaughterhouse on their own.” Nature will always cull the herd, so to speak. But that is simply how things have worked for thousands of years. Those who see themselves as elitists neither believe in God nor in Nature and simply think they should redesign the world. These ideas have been floating around for a very long time. I have listened to them in meetings for the past 40 years and often asked what was my opinion. While the computer has correctly forecast these dark years, it also clearly shows they will lose. For that, they never liked that forecast but assumed it was just my opinion. Sorry! Wrong again!

<https://www.armstrongeconomics.com/world-news/tyranny/the-stupid-will-believe-it-and-ask-to-be-treated-pandemic-to-depopulate-1981/>

We are the News Now

www.ColoradoPatriots4Action.com/
Patriot-Press

Hunter Biden's laptop has been real from day one.
It took 2 years of denials before the commercial media started talking about it....
Now that they are willing to talk about it.
I wonder what they are distracting you from NOW?
Stay Awake, Stay Vigilant
There is NOTHING honorable

2019 - BARACK AND MICHELLE OBAMA'S 29 ACRE $14 MILLION DOLLAR MANSION

STAND UP WOMEN!!!

The OG Toni B(TFSTTFG) ReTruthed
Ian Smith @iansmithfitness 1w
The unfortunate truth about dudes competing in women's sports.
The more women allow it, the worse it will get. You have to sacrifice a meet, match, or even a season to make a point - but that is the reality.
Next time William lines up at the starting line, every woman at the meet should line up, then when the whistle blows, let this clown jump in and swim alone.
Sit out and protest the NCAA allowing such lunacy.
Femininity is under attack.
Stand the fuck up.
No one will do this for you.

ACCEPTABLE REASONS FOR TEACHERS TO TALK TO KINDERGARTNERS ABOUT SEX

■ NONE
■ ALSO NONE, BUT IN RED

Psalm 37:10-11
A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WICKED WILL BE NO MORE; THOUGH YOU LOOK FOR THEM, THEY WILL NOT BE FOUND.
BUT THE MEEK WILL INHERIT THE LAND AND ENJOY GREAT PEACE. NIV

TOP ANALYSIS, MEMES, AND CARTOONS AT PATRIOTPOST.US

BREAKING NEWS
GOD IS STILL IN CONTROL OF EVERY SITUATION
NO NEED TO PANIC

The Architect. @TheMarcitect
Seeing Jabbed people spending 99% of their time with other jabbed people and getting sick constantly now should be enough to get some Neurons firing in those calcified brains.. but it's not. That's how bad this really is.
12:30 PM · 29 Mar 22 · Twitter Web App

The "it would be so much worse if I weren't vaccinated" campaign has been incredibly effective. People have become conditioned to think nonstop illness is normal.

in the report include:

1. Fake voters. The voter did not cast a ballot, but County Clerk and Recorder and Secretary of State managed records show a ballot was cast in the voter's name.

2. Lost votes. The voter did cast a ballot but records show no ballot was cast.

3. Illegal votes. The voter did not live at the address indicated at the time of the 2020 election.

4. Voter data manipulation. The voter's party affiliation changed without their authorization.

Voter database manipulation. The voter did not reside at the documented address in the voter database at the time of canvassing, but months after canvassing the voter was registered at the same address in the voter registration database.

Explaining or rationalizing these anomalies and irregularities will be extremely difficult for elected officials. It's anticipated that county clerks, commissioners, and Secretary of State Jena Griswold will dismiss the Colorado canvassing report with flimsy excuses like the anomalies are not widespread, or no election is completely without some irregularities, or clerical errors can happen due to data and record transferring between databases.

Unfortunately, the data is overwhelming in USEIP's Colorado Canvassing Report. The findings obliterate tired excuses historically used for dismissing objective evidence and dodging responsibility.

It's anticipated election officials will shift blame to the public, claiming voters don't understand how elections work, to dismiss legitimate public concerns. In fact, Secretary Griswold is joined by Executive Director of the Colorado County Clerks Association Matt Crane, numerous Colorado clerks, including Carly Koppes (Weld), and Chuck Broerman (El Paso), in parroting the tired and inaccurate trope, "Colorado's elections are the gold standard!"

Clerk Broerman went so far as proudly claiming his voter rolls in El Paso are "pristine" after the 2021 local elections. In that same election, in cooperation with Secretary Griswold, El Paso's election results were manually changed after a discrepancy was discovered between the state and county-reported results. The Colorado Canvassing Report exposes El Paso County as having an anomaly / irregularity rate ranging from 7.5% to 13.5%. This translates to a range of 54,359 to 69,829 El Paso County voters.

"The 2020 voter data told a story. We found patterns in the data which signaled the results in Colorado's 2020 election had serious, unexplained problems. The only way to unequivocally verify what we saw was to manually verify the publicly available information from the voters themselves. What this report proves is shocking. Every voter and elected official needs to immediately take action to investigate in order to understand how to fix our obviously broken election system." States Jeff Young, the chief author of the report.

Given the slim margins deciding local races and measures, numerous elected officials and counties in the state have been impacted. There are many legal cases that serve as precedent for remedying illegal elections. In fact, it's surprisingly common to have elected officials removed from office even after they've taken office, and after more than a year has passed since the certification of the race.

Find the entire Colorado Canvassing Report at: www.coloradopatriot4action.com/patriot-press

Colorado Elections: Gold Standard No More

[Denver, Colorado, March 10, 2022] – A report published today by the U.S. Election Integrity Plan (USEIP) found that hundreds of thousands of Colorado voters were impacted by election irregularities and anomalies in the 2020 elections. The report analyzed canvassing records from multiple Colorado Counties. Volunteers went door-to-door verifying public voting records. The election data that was verified is public, maintained by Colorado Secretary of State Jena Griswold.

Professional statisticians, mathematicians, retired military officers, software engineers, and corporate training specialists came together on a completely volunteer basis to design the canvassing program from start to finish. The peer-reviewed, statistical sampling method used for the canvassing was designed so that results can hold up in court. This strict and rigorous approach produced statistical significance in the canvassed counties. More importantly, it allows for statistically sound assertions on voting irregularities to be made for the state as whole. Those assertions are stunning. Extrapolating the canvassed county findings to the entire state, the number of impacted voters in Colorado is between 210,091 and 462,201.

The USEIP report exposes shocking types of widespread problems with the Colorado election system. A sample of the top irregularities

Jerm Warfare Battleground

CANADA | News

Conspiracy theorists keep getting things right; Experts say "that's dangerous"

Movements like the "freedom convoy" are fueled by conspiracy theories, and when those theories are correct, it legitimizes them.

Fact check:

Silence Would Make Me
Complicit

Here's an example of a $100 Disney gift card: Minnie's dress looks exactly like a penis, which Mickey happens to be gladly holding.

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR

There is a crackle in the air, and it's not just springtime. If you listen closely, you can almost hear the panic in the air. We're four months into 2022 and so much has happened the pages of Patriot Press can barely contain it. Durham has been dropping bombs ahead of his May 16th trial that will open the whole of the Deep States Pandora's Box. Commercial media will be chomping at the bit with distractions to keep you from finding out just how complicit and corrupt Hillary Clinton, Barack Obama, and their host of malicious marauders were in the SpyGate scandal. Once the box is opened this treason will make Watergate look like ants spoiling a picnic. More information around the vaccine injuries has surfaced and more providers are eschewing the "benefits" of jabbing children. Each day more drug and sex traffickers are finding their way to our borders, inflation is near all-time highs. Gas prices are ridiculous, especially with our glorious crude stores pooled beneath our feet, given by the creator for our benefit.

ing off the television news and doing some research of their own... Off Google and using a BRAVE browser so they can actually find uncensored data. More people are asking questions, getting involved in local politics, making decisions to vote with their dollars outside the global corporations. Most importantly, people are opening their eyes to the agenda of the woke, to the grooming of our children, to the evils of massive corporations going unchecked, to more and more pedophiles being pulled out of tunnels and hundreds of thousands of children being rescued from sex-trafficking rings.

It's been a long-haul Dear Reader, but this is a process, not an event and we MUST hold the line. We must have more conversations, speak more freely, be more present, and offer ourselves in understanding when our loved ones finally wake up to the horrors we've been privy to over the past few years.

NOTHING is more important than fighting for our nation, for Freedom, for our families, and

So what's the GOOD NEWS? Slowly, but surely, people are awakening from their Deep State induced slumber. More and more people are turn- for our God because once gone.... We will never get them back. But GOOD NEWS: I read the book and I know GOD WINS!

One last note, I am more grateful than you can possibly imagine that you hold this passion project in your hands right now. Special thanks to all who are helping to keep this newspaper in print form and for your encouragement and kindness around the final product.

Openvaers.com/covid-data

Numbers of Adverse Events reported ———> 1,237,645 Reports
Through April 15, 2022

27,349
DEATHS

151,589
HOSPITALIZATIONS

127,863
URGENT CARE

188,784
DOCTOR OFFICE VISITS

9,644
ANAPHYLAXIS

15,255
BELL'S PALSY

4,538
Miscarriages

13,985
Heart Attacks

39,177
Myocarditis/Pericarditis

50,700
Permanently Disabled

6,452
Thrombocytopenia/
Low Platelet

30,580
Life Threatening

41,600
Severe Allergic
Reaction

13,518
Shingles

VAERS is the Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System put in place in 1990. It is a voluntary reporting system that has been estimated to account for only 1% (see the Lazarus Report) of vaccine injuries. OpenVAERS is built from the HHS data available for download at vaers.hhs.gov.

Moira Greyland: Daughter of famed sci-fi author explains mother's gay pedophile worldview <Interview>

By Matthew Cullinan Hoffman, May 17, 2018

Moira Greyland, daughter of famed science fiction author Marion Zimmer Bradley, has recently published her memoirs recounting the horrific sexual abuse she and her two brothers suffered at the hands of her lesbian mother and homosexual father, Walter Breen, a famous numismatist in his own right. Greyland's book, The Last Closet: The Dark Side of Avalon, has spent weeks on Amazon's bestseller lists for Kindle and was recently published as a physical book by Castalia House.

In the following interview with LifeSite, Greyland explains the mentality and worldview that animated her parents and that led so many science fiction fans to ignore and even to accept Marion Zimmer Bradley and Walter Breen's homosexualist and pedophilic ideologies. Greyland also provides a context for understanding the sexual deviancy that permeates Zimmer Bradley's works, particularly her bestselling "Mists of Avalon."

LifeSite: Your account of life in the madhouse that was your home is truly horrific and simultaneously very credible. Both of your parents were homosexual activists who sexually and physically abused you for years, and your father in particular sexually abused a large number of boys outside of the family. Your home was a moral and physical chaos, a place that was unhinged and seemingly without boundaries, and this was witnessed by many people. How did these two individuals, so famous and highly regarded in their respective fields of work (science fiction authorship and numismatics), and so very public in their interactions with others, get away with such atrocities for so long, and what does that say about the moral state of sci-fi fandom, and the city of Berkeley, where you grew up?

Moira Greyland: There are two reasons my mother and father got away with what they did for so long. Fame and money, with the first being more important.

Fame confers a glamour on its owner. Fame makes it seem as though the one possessing it understands something which mere mortals cannot, and so imitating the famous person will surely lead to success and happiness.

My mother's fame came from her ability to write, and to express ideas which appealed to a large number of people. Her descriptions of edgy, perverted sexuality appealed to those eager to throw off the rigid moral structure and narrow ideas about sexuality which prevailed in her day.

The fact that these moral structures were protective of both men and women was trampled and tossed aside in pursuit of new internal permissions to do literally anything with anyone. The fact that the consequences of these new internal permissions was disaster for generations of men, women and children who must now live with broken homes, all that was ignored.

In all the counterculture groups, whether the Society for Creative Anachronism or science fiction fandom, the group becomes a stand-in for one's own family. Fandom is full of the disaffected, the misfits, people from broken homes, even people who were rejected by their own families for one reason or another. The new surrogate family is every bit as broken as the original family, but its value is greatly exaggerated to the people who need it, because it provides not only a common frame of reference but common interests, and a sense of belonging and understanding which they might never have experienced before.

And there you have the true poison pill of science fiction fandom and the sexual revolution: my father viewed himself as a revolutionary and a visionary.

He did not see himself as a pedophile. He saw himself as gay. Moreover, since he regarded every man as being "naturally gay" he was doing a great thing, in his own imagination.

The real-life failure of his sexual ideas was a source of anger and frustration to him. We simply did not live up to his expectations with all our tiresome crying and protests. My father was perpetually annoyed that the boy prostitutes he saw wanted money, food and presents, instead of "desiring" him, as he thought they should.

I could imagine him screaming at me and his other targets "Hurry up and get enlightened and quit crying right this minute!!!"

Rocking the boat represents the end of the new, idealized surrogate family. The price for standing up for a child is being ostracized by one's entire family. For someone in a surrogate family, losing the new family is unthinkable. Social death hurt too much the first time for anyone to want to risk it a second time.

So were the Berkeley fan-nish people morally nebulous? Yes. They took social and moral cues from the writers they admired, and science fiction is full of bizarre sexuality with no limits at all. There was a sense that sexual morality was something left behind with their square, unsympathetic original families. Since sexual morality was so widely questioned, it was easier to assume that the famous people had figured it all out and do the same stupid things they did.

And the blind lead the blind. Sexual morality is questioned, loyalty to the new group is total, and the price is too high, but it does not feel as high as social annihilation. The sexual predators took reckless advantage of the need for belonging exhibited by the followers.

By an absolute fluke, I ended up on the outside. I did not care if my famous mother approved of me or not.

Over time, it became more and more obvious that the price of remaining in my family was to overlook conduct which would cause absolute destruction of another human being.

When the person being destroyed was me, I figured I could cope. But when the person being destroyed was a child, I didn't think I had the right to make him cope.

And I was furious at what I was being asked to overlook! How could the adults in my family encourage a woman to leave her son with my father for a week, and make sure she did not ask me, the only person in the whole family who would have told her to keep her son away from my father?

Continued on page 13

The Conspiracy to Track and Trace and Usher in the NWO - General Michael Flynn

"And Harari even from his own words. He talks about the last five years in this new fourth industrial revolution that Klaus Schwab describes it as. So, these are real people. These are real things; they have they have an intent to have a New World Order. They have an intent to track every single one of us, and they use it under the skin."

@VigilantFox | Rumble Clip | Full Video

<https://rumble.com/vylrg4-flynnclark-arrogance-and-selfishness-will-be-the-downfall-of-the-ds-patriot.html>

Moira Greyland, Continued from page 12

By reporting my father to the police, I broke the central rule of the community by visibly siding with the authorities against sexual license which included exploitation of a little boy. I fell on my sword and lost all my people. And it hurt, like nothing had ever hurt before. But there were gifts in the agony. I lost horrible people, not decent people, and I decisively took a moral stand that let me know I was not one of them. I would not be bought, I would not be silenced, and if it upset a million apple carts to get that little boy out of danger, it was worth it. After losing horrible people, I found decent people. People who would never have dreamed of making the sort of moral compromises my mother made every day.

For the best possible picture of the moral atmosphere of Berkeley, look to the situation in my family when my father is trying to “adopt” Barry, his twelve year old sexual partner. My mother is completely aware of what my father has been doing, and suggests that once Barry is adopted that he be a son instead of a sexual partner.

Can you imagine being in a house where the mother takes for granted the fact that her husband is sleeping with several little boys, and she is so unconcerned about it that she simply suggests the sexual relationship between her husband and a child end once he is adopted?

The fact that my father had no interest in complying with her wishes was beside the point.

How many women would tolerate a child being sodomized under her roof?

LifeSite: The homosexual movement has a long history of association with organizations and groups that are sympathetic to pedophilia or promote it outright. Your father was a homosexual activist and an open advocate of pedophilia. For decades the “North American Man-Boy Love Association” (NAMBLA) marched in homosexual “pride” marches, and major homosexual organizations, like the International Gay and Lesbian Association, used to have NAMBLA as a member. Do you see the embrace of pedophilia as a natural outgrowth of the homosexual movement?

Moira Greyland: In my father’s book, Greek Love (J.Z. Eglinton, 1962), he explored at length the fact that pedophilic and pederastic relationships are the historical norm, and peer-to-peer gay relationships are a modern phenomenon. Where I completely deny my father’s contention that pederastic relationships do anything positive for young men, I do believe that nearly all gay men were initiated in this fashion as boys by older men.

Attempts to sanitize these “initiations” of younger boys by older men are ongoing, including in the recent movie “Call Me By Your Name” which Hollywood gushed over, despite its appalling content.

Since the reality of gay culture depends on these initiations, there are only two choices: keep the reality of the genesis of a gay identity secret, or yank it out of the closet and risk the outrage and hatred of the general public.

Here is the trouble: screaming “homophobia” at anything which has a problem with homosexual conduct will only go so far. As soon as our children are endangered, and their seduction praised, the torches and pitchforks rightfully come out.

After all, this is the Big Secret, and the truth behind a gay identity. Father-son porn is the number one topic of all gay pornography. Why is this the actual reality? In male nature, there is the need to pursue, to vanquish, to conquer. This is much easier with a young, vulnerable, hairless and helpless male. They can be manipulated into adoring an older male, putting up with darned near ANYTHING for his love and approval (read: fathering) — and they submit. Always in male homosexual relationships, there is the top and the bottom, the giver and the receiver, and these roles are predicated on age and the ability to project masculine dominance.

This is the conclusion I reached, not only from knowing far too many young boys seduced by my father, but also reading the words of former gay men like Joseph Sciambra and Robert Oscar Lopez.

Male homosexuals know, and count on the fact that a young man who does not have a present, protective father in his life will be much easier to seduce than either a masculine boy who obviously has a strong father, or an older man who might well beat or kill them for a sexual overture. They seek out boys who are unsure or effeminate, precisely because of those qualities.

How can they persuade those they persuade? Boys tend to be perpetually sexually frustrated, and know that vanishingly few girls will go along with their advances at that age. Predatory male homosexuals take advantage of this knowledge, and offer porn and intoxicants to lower the inhibitions of their target. Once the sexual assault has taken place, even involuntary arousal on the part of the male victim is used as “proof” that the boy is actually gay.

This attitude assumes that being gay is a physical, inevitable reality which other gay men can “see.” But the truth is that the first sexual experience will usually create an indelible impression, a longstanding change to a male fantasy life, deliberately imposed. These raped and molested boys are not “gay,” they have been forcibly imprinted with a sexual act meant to permanently alter their fantasy life.

Claiming the involuntary arousal suffered by the boy “proves” they are gay is like claiming that bleeding as the result of a stab wound proves the victim wanted to be stabbed.

In any case, the raped boy is destroyed three times. Once by the betrayal of the sexual assault, even if they end up going along with it, once by the permanent alteration to their fantasy life, and once by the forced imposition of a “gay” identity which is made to seem inevitable and indelible.

Without pederastic relationships, there would be no adult gay men. But as it is the Big Secret, don’t expect any admissions about this. When Milo joked about his own initiation at thirteen, he was demolished in the press. Shortly thereafter, he admitted on video that he actually had been raped, and it actually was a horrible experience.

It is no joke. When I see a man who identifies as homosexual acting out in a flamboyant way, I see the thirteen year old boys in my house screaming with rage: “I meant to do that! You did not hurt me, I am no victim, and you will not own me, you BASTARD!”

LifeSite: Many science fiction and fantasy authors have treated pedophilia, incest, and homosexuality with a creepy sort of sympathy. For example, Robert Heinlein’s “Time Enough for Love,” has a protagonist who has sexual relations with his adopted daughter, clones himself as two women and “marries” them (as well as two men), and finally travels back in time where he has sexual relations with his own mother. The book was nominated for both the Hugo and Nebula awards and Heinlein was called the “dean of science fiction writers,” and his followers have created a “Robert Heinlein award” for science fiction writing.

Continued on Page 15

Donald Trump Sues Hillary Clinton, Others Over Russian Collusion

By Gary Ray, March 24, 2022

Former President Donald Trump, who is known to be quick to pull the trigger on filing a lawsuit, has filed a new suit against Hillary Clinton and several who served in her 2016 election campaign.

Trump, who has sued actors (Tom Arnold), networks, (NBC and CBS), newspapers (The New York Times), government officials (Harry Reid), and even a 92-year-old widow (Molly Forbes, who was critical of how Trump secured land for a Golf Resort near her home in Scotland), has now set his sights on his old nemesis, Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Reuters reports that following recent Durham investigation indictments, Declassified documents show that illegal wiretapping and computer surveillance work can be traced back to Clinton operatives.

Trump is suing, asserting that Hillary and her staff attempted to “rig the 2016 presidential election by tying his campaign to Russia,” according to the report.

Trump’s filing reads:

“Acting in concert, the Defendants maliciously conspired to weave a false narrative that their Republican opponent, Donald J. Trump, was colluding with a hostile foreign sovereignty.”

According to Reuters: Trump said he was “forced to incur expenses in an amount to be determined at trial, but known to be in excess of twenty-four million dollars ($24,000,000) and continuing to accrue, in the form of defense costs, legal fees, and related expenses.”

“To date, the government has produced over 60,000 documents in unclassified discovery.”

On Tuesday, Special Counsel John Durham suggested that this week, the Department of Justice will release a “large volume” of classified materials pertaining to the so-called ‘Russiagate’ conspiracy. Materials pertain to former British spy Christopher Steele’s dossier, reportedly used to attempt to sabotage Trump’s 2016 election campaign and later, his presidency.

True Story

Stalin once ripped all the feathers off a live chicken as a lesson to his followers. He then set the chicken on the floor a short distance away. The chicken was bloodied and suffering immensely, yet, when Stalin began to toss some bits of wheat toward the chicken it followed him around. He said to his followers “This is how easy it is to govern stupid people, they will follow you no matter how much pain you cause them, as long as you throw them a little worthless treat once in a while”

Durham stated in the filing: “To date, the government has produced over 60,000 documents in unclassified discovery. A portion of these documents were originally marked ‘classified’ and the government has worked with the appropriate declassification authorities to produce the documents in an unclassified format,”

“However,” Durham continued, as he prepared to ask for an extension in his investigation work, “recent world events in Ukraine have contributed to delays in the production of classified discovery. The officials preparing and reviewing the documents at the FBI and intelligence agencies are heavily engaged in matters related to Ukraine.”

WELL, THIS DIDN'T AGE WELL!

Whaddya say we stir some Shit UP!

Trump Sues, Continued from Page 14

“Nevertheless,” Durham added, “the government will produce a large volume of classified discovery this week and will continue its efforts to produce documents in classified discovery on a rolling basis, and no later than the proposed deadlines...”

The Washington Examiner adds:

The case revolves around Igor Danchenko, a Russian researcher based in the United States, who was charged in November with five counts of making false statements to the FBI in 2017 about the information he provided to Steele for his discredited dossier during the 2016 election.

Danchenko, who has pleaded not guilty, signed a waiver in December agreeing to be defended by the same law firm representing members of Hillary Clinton’s 2016 presidential campaign despite a conflict of interest concerns raised by Durham.

Steele was working for Oleg Deripaska, an oligarch linked to Russian President Vladimir Putin, before, during, and after his time targeting then-candidate Donald Trump.

The former MI6 agent was hired to put his anti-Trump dossier together by an opposition research firm, Fusion GPS, which was simultaneously working for Kremlin-linked lawyer Natalia Veselnitskaya of the now-infamous June 2016 Trump Tower meeting. His research received funding from the Clinton campaign and the Democratic National Committee.

Danchenko allegedly relied on a network of Russian contacts, undermined key Trump-Russia collusion claims when interviewed by the FBI, and had previously been investigated as a possible threat to national security due to potential Russian intelligence contacts.

According to Durham’s false statements charges, he anonymously sourced a claim about Trump campaign manager Paul Manafort to longtime Clinton ally Chuck Dolan, who spent many years, including 2016, doing work for Russian businesses and the Russian government.

In a report released in December 2019, Justice Dept. Inspector General Michael Horowitz concluded that the Steele dossier, now tied to the Hillary Clinton election campaign, played a “central and essential” role in the FBI’s decision to launch a counterintelligence operation against the 2016 Trump campaign.

The Steele dossier facilitated efforts to obtain wiretap orders against former Trump campaign associate Carter Page — efforts that were ultimately successful, but only after “serious missteps and errors” which included concealing “potentially exculpatory information from the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court,” the Washington Examiner reported.

https://resistthemainstream.org/donald-trump-sues-hillary-clinton-others-over-russian-collusion/?utm_source=telegram

Moira Greyland, Continued from page 13

My question is this: as one who grew up in this world and was so terribly victimized by such attitudes, why do you believe sci-fi and fantasy writers and their fans have such a thirst for this kind of material? What is the connection between these genres of literature and these pathological tendencies?

Moira Greyland: People wanted to have promiscuous sex and the books gave them a map. The authors writing about the promiscuous sex were hailed as Great Thinkers, and it was assumed that if the people in the books were happy and promiscuous, then it would work out that way in real life.

Throwing off sexual morality meant more sex, more often, with no way for women to refuse without being labeled “prudish.” It meant an end to the sexual dominance of the biggest and the strongest, and meant any ugly jerk could get laid if he had drugs and a good line.

Sexual morality is questioned, and all the rules are thrown out. Suddenly, instead of having one husband and one wife, people are having all kinds of sex with all kinds of people, and a lot of people like it. Some are too drug-addled, drunk or stupid to think through the implications, and others have weak personalities and go along with anything their husband or wife demands provided they can stay married.

But here is the trouble. Since the new social circle operates on a new rulebook, whether it is the Stranger in a Strange Land rulebook or the Darkover rulebook, it is no longer acceptable to do things the old way. In practice, the wife who has a broken heart because her husband is carrying on with five women, or five small boys, had better keep her mouth shut or risk losing him.

Since the books delegitimize jealousy and fidelity, troubles in the relationship which normally result from adultery must be blamed on something else. Now instead of it being normal to hate the other woman, the wife is in the atrocious position of having to blame her own jealousy and possessiveness for her agony. She can no longer blame her husband for his conduct, and must instead blame herself.

Naturally, in practice, this is a recipe for disaster. The result is divorce, abortions, broken homes, single parenthood, and always the blame was misplaced. Adultery does not work. Promiscuity does not work. Polyamory does not work. But if you are in a social circle where they are normalized, you have to swallow the poison pill or lose your social group.

Even in the weirdest social circle, there will be a few good couples who love each other and who just can’t get into the poly stuff no matter how fashionable it might be. One might even think that those people have a moral compass or a backbone, and they are probably the couple that heads on over to church while the rest of their circle are sleeping off the debauchery. Are they aware that their morality has saved their marriage and their family? Maybe. But you can be sure they do not trumpet their differences. And years after the dust settles, it will be those couples who say “I always felt funny about the weird sex in Marion Zimmer Bradley’s books.”

And it will be those couples who have stayed together.

LifeSite: According to your account, your home was a place of pagan rituals and your parents apparently considered themselves to be pagans, at least in the 1970s. How did pagan beliefs and practices contribute to your parents’ worldview?

Moira Greyland: As I mentioned in my book, I do not believe my mother or father actually believed a shred of the goddess-worship nonsense they peddled. Goddess-worship translates loosely to “men worship women as goddesses, so let’s all have lots of sex with our goddesses, because in paganism, worship is confused with sex.”

What my mother actually believed in was occultism. She frequently referenced the Rosicrucian church, and believed in ghosts, spirits, and psychic powers. My father believed in psychic powers, and in aliens. They denied both hell and heaven and spoke of “The Other Side” as the realm of the afterlife.

Continued on Page 16

Joe Biden @JoeBiden
United States government official

The President needs to stop blaming others and do his job.
8:10 PM · Apr 20, 2020

Couldn't have said it better myself!

Moira Greyland, Continued from page 15

Both believed in reincarnation. Not Hindu reincarnation, which holds that a bad man is reborn as a woman, and a bad woman is reborn as a cabbage or an insect. Instead, they believed in New Age reincarnation, which holds that our promiscuous, oft married, divorced and shacked-up parents are so amazingly enlightened that they will be successively reborn to greater and greater planes of existence.

After listening to the psychic gobbledygook for decades, I came to a few conclusions. First, it is nonsense, and second, it is not well thought out nonsense. Telepathy could be replaced by the far simpler and more effective expedient of picking up the phone, or paying someone a visit and actually talking to them. Psychokinesis or teleportation could be replaced by simply getting up, picking up the item you want moved and moving it yourself. Levitation, which at best seems to amount to sages bouncing around on their bottoms, could be easily replaced by getting up and walking where you want to go, getting into the car, or booking a flight on Southwest.

Being impressed with or claiming psychic powers was just another way for strong personalities to manipulate weaker ones. "I am A Heap Big Powerful Psychic Magic Person" really meant "I am stronger, smarter and more powerful than you. I am Alpha, and I therefore have sexual privilege, and you will obey me."

Perhaps the most important thing to notice about the entire culture of the Sixties and Seventies is this. Traditionally, the ones with the power and the social dominance were the biggest and the strongest. The advent of the hippies and geek culture turned that on its head. All of a sudden, you did not have to be big, strong or beautiful to obtain status. All you needed was an idea, like permissive sexual-

LifeSite: You recount in the book that, despite the pagan practices and anti-Christian attitudes in your home, at some point you secretly became a Christian. How did this come about and what effect did it have on you during this terrible period of suffering in your life, as well as after you left home?

Moira Greyland: I was about ten, and staying at the houses of friends in order to escape my home. I used to listen obsessively to Jesus Christ Superstar, which my parents did not tolerate well in their house. I would cry and cry and not know why. One day I heard Jesus talking to me, very quietly, and very gently. He told me what my father would never say. He told me he loved me, and that I was His, and that He would take care of me.

The effect that my secret conversion to Christianity had on me was to give me enough strength to eventually go to the cops about my father's sexual abuse of children. He made it possible for me to quietly question the nonsense I had been programmed to believe, and He gave me the hope of eventual escape.

I know that most conversion stories are more dramatic, with more fireworks, but mine was not like that. It was more like He showed me the reason for the iron backbone He had given me all along, and He made it so I was eventually strong enough to break the lies in my family and ended the active abuse of the children in our home.

One thing my faith in God did was to help me understand why speaking the truth about the family secrets was so important to me.

One thing my faith in God did was to help me understand why speaking the truth about the family secrets was so important to me. For all that people try to claim how "tolerant" Jesus was, that is a conclusion born of no actual knowledge. Jesus challenged people right and left, whether they were committing sexual sin or some other kind of sin.

Jesus sat down to eat with tax collectors and prostitutes, who stopped being tax collectors and prostitutes, and became disciples and followers. At no point did Jesus encourage or tolerate sin, but called it out openly at every turn. There were times when his scoldings included calling people "whitewashed sepulchers" and even "broods of vipers." Just how tolerant is that?

Jesus never stops loving sinners, but understands that sin hurts us, and it hurts the people around us. Allowing it to continue, or claiming that sin is magically acceptable, only prolongs suffering.

Paganism seeks to reinterpret sin, and in so doing, to out-shout our own consciences. We are meant to regard promiscuous sex as being holy and Christianity as being evil, because it "judges and blames." The fact that all the sin has the predictable results of destroying our lives and our relationships is conveniently overlooked. Something other than promiscuity must be blamed, because since sex is a "sacrament" it cannot possibly be the problem.

Continued on page 17

Moira Greyland, Continued from page 16

I had to be old enough and strong enough that I would be able to handle the break which would inevitably come when I went to the police. I could hardly expect my mother and her girlfriend Lisa to back me up when they knew what had been happening for years, and had done nothing about it.

LifeSite: Worldcon, which is the largest and most important gathering of sci-fi and fantasy literature fandom in the world, recently banned famed science fiction writer and Worldcon member Jon Del Arroz from its annual convention this year in San Jose, California. Their reasoning was a vague and unexplained accusation that he meant to stir up trouble at the convention. Others say it was because he is a conservative. At the same time, your publisher, Vox Day, pointed out in a recent post that Worldcon has never banned any pedophile or other sex criminal in its whole history. Does this surprise you? Why is Worldcon behaving this way? Do you believe that Worldcon has adequately addressed its past tolerance of pedophiles and other sex abusers?

Moira Greyland: Jon Del Arroz, who is a friend of mine, was banned from Worldcon because he is conservative, and because he stated that he would wear a bodycam in response to the threats and doxxing he received. I saw a photo of the springloaded, genital-shaped glitter bomb which was mailed to him and went off in his kitchen in front of his children.

Why would Worldcon ban Jon Del Arroz, while gleefully allowing my mother and father to attend in the past? My father, Walter Breen, was banned from Worldcon for only one day, after his molestation of at least ten children was announced to the sci-fi community in an affair that came to be known as the “Great Breen Boondoggle” or the “Breendoggle” (https://breendoggle.wikia.com/wiki/Breendoggle_Wiki).

It is simple. As I mentioned earlier, fame brings with it the assumption that the famous person has some amazing secrets to share which ordinary mortals cannot imagine. People do not see my parents as ordinary schmucks with perverted ideas, but imbue them with nearly mystical importance. Since they Wrote Books, they are smart and possessed of a special something which their fans believe can only be obtained by drawing as close to them as possible.

Jon Del Arroz is a new author, up-and-coming, and not a legend like my mother. Since his ideas are so different from those of my mother, he is a threat to the status quo. After all, in effect, my mother, Heinlein and Piers Anthony told several generations of science fiction fans that all the sex they wanted was OK, and they shaped their very lives around these ideas.

In fact, it was their enlightened sexual sensibilities which made them so very superior to the “mere mortals” of the rest of the world. Conservatives, prudes, Christians, and anti-abortion weirdos are regarded as being mentally inferior, unenlightened, and needing the patient guidance of the superior minds of the science fiction community. The assumption is that the Conservatives will all eventually get a clue and follow along.

Jon Del Arroz, John C. Wright, and other conservative authors challenge that mindset. But the Old Guard in science fiction fandom is both hidebound and totally dependent on alternative sexuality as a framework for the universe. Anything which goes against alternative sexuality and Liberal values is deeply threatening to fandom. After all, their Great Ideas all concluded that promiscuous sex would bring happiness. Conservatives and Christians are spoilsports who have no place at the table.

The fact that much of the very best fiction being written today does not come from the population of aging perverts which comprise the core of fandom must be grating indeed.

LifeSite: In a recent radio interview you were asked a question that was so difficult for you to answer that the interview needed to be ended at that time. I hope it isn't too burdensome to ask you, but certainly our readers will want to know. The question is, quite simply: How are you, following the writing of this book, and following such horrible trauma for so many years in your childhood? Has writing the book helped you to heal in any way? How did your siblings fare after reaching adulthood?

Moira Greyland: How am I? I am not good. I am lucky in that my job allows me to work at home, where I teach voice and harp, and my performances are limited right now of necessity. I have a lot of distress from flashbacks and nightmares. I wish this was not true but it is. I had a very severe episode of major depression after writing the book, which I have only begun to come out of.

It is a blessing that I know that it is a major depressive episode, rather than buying into every stray thought which walks across my head. It does not reduce the pain to know it is only a depressive episode, but it does reduce the chance of my doing anything irrevocably stupid. I think of it as having “bad brain” rather than using my misery as an excuse for self-reproach or self-hatred which would only compound the issue.

The part which many people do not understand is this. It is not thinking about the past which is the problem. It is the fact that severe trauma rewires your brain and alters your responses to things. Where a normal person would not respond at all to about a million different things, from a loud noise, the sound of someone crying, or even a tap on the shoulder, my brain interprets these things as catastrophic danger or threat.

I have taught myself to reality-test very quickly and shut down my inappropriate responses to things, but although I can minimize and shorten my response, I cannot alter it or eliminate it. This is isolating, because I know if I am in public and someone taps me on the shoulder, I will gasp in terror and look like an idiot for several seconds before I shut it down, apologize, and do my best to act normal.

People always want to know if it was healing and cathartic to write the book. Healing? No. Maybe. Cathartic? Yes.

The popular notion is that a catharsis will bring healing. It can, but the trouble with Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder is that a catharsis can be profoundly retraumatizing, like ripping off a scab, or re-breaking a partially set fracture.

I wrote my book because I thought the story needed telling, not because I expected it to heal me. I have spent many years reading and studying, learning to stay calm instead of dissolving in terror and tears and panic. But still, those are my first responses, no matter how quickly I have learned to blunt them.

Writing the book has allowed me to come to some unwelcome conclusions, like understanding the pivotal events when I was ten in the destruction of my relationship with my father. So many things float by and we do not necessarily understand what they mean at the time.

But frankly, writing the book was the most excruciating task I have ever done. It is my hope that it will empower others to speak up against their own trauma, and to lay the blame squarely at the feet of the perps and at the feet of the idiots who dreamed up the sexual anarchy which made so much of it possible.

Continued on page 18

“People do not see my parents as ordinary schmucks with perverted ideas, but imbue them with nearly mystical importance.”

Moira Greyland, continued from Page 16

What a bill of good we have been sold! Just because Kinsey wrote about how allegedly harmless all this sex was, and my mother and others wrote pansexual and intergenerational sex into their books, suddenly every jerk who wants extramarital sex is a Great Revolutionary Thinker, not just another sexual degenerate.

The one really good thing that came from the book, apart from a profound sense of relief, is my brand-new ability to be angry with my father. My previous inability to be mad at him kept me stuck in a childlike posture in relationship to him, and it left me dependent on his ludicrous opinion of me. He felt I was a failure because I was a prude, because I would not bring his Grand Vision to the world, and his final assessment of me was that I was his murderer. His murderer. And for many years, I felt I had no choice but to believe this. Even as I rejected his ideas, they still mattered. The judge at my father's trial was a much better model, regarding my father as sexually dangerous, completely lacking in remorse, and likely to offend literally from his deathbed.

If nothing else, I hope my book will demonstrate that a pedophile is not an unmarried straight man born in a trench coat who hangs around playgrounds and entices children with candy. Pedophiles are married, have gay and straight sex, usually lots of it, and look like everyone else.

How are my siblings? My brother David died in his fifties, estranged from my mother but in close contact with my cousin Ian. He never married, though he was in a long term relationship with a woman who did not always live with him. He died quite suddenly from heart failure. He lived on SSI, complete disability. He had had a head injury resulting in epilepsy, but I am positive it was more than that.

My brother Mark is still alive at 53, and his health is very bad. He has poorly controlled diabetes. He lived with me for a time, but I asked him to move to Greyhaven, our multi-generational family home, after two episodes of diabetic coma nearly killed him. I figured that where I am often traveling or performing out of town, at Greyhaven, there were plenty of people who would look in on Mark every day, and he would not be risking coma like he would be by being alone in my house.

Self-care is very common among the severely traumatized. Passive suicide, the same. It cannot be ignored or minimized. Like most men, my brother is quite stoic, and suffered in silence. As a result, his Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) has been virtually untreated. I cannot begin to describe to you how distressing PTSD is when there is no way to understand what is happening. There is a reason so many vets with PTSD kill themselves. It hurts less than being alive.

PTSD rewires the brain, and causes us to react to nearly everything as though it was a threat. Since everything seems like a threat, we cannot always respond effectively to actual threats, although the ability to do so is often the dividing line between a miserable quality of life and the ability to improve our condition. Also, the perpetual state of hypervigilance our brains are locked into is profoundly exhausting. We want to relax, yes, we really do. But it feels dangerous to sleep, lest we miss a threat. Much of this is unconscious, and reality testing does not improve it. Yes, I know I am safe here. But my brain does not know it, and it refuses to be talked into believing it.

For a time, Mark spoke openly of what our parents had done, notably in his interview "Secret Keeper No More" (published on line several years ago, but since removed) but then he became frightened and stopped wanting to talk once he went to Greyhaven.

Also, when two of my voice students complained about hearing my uncle Don talking about sleeping with his ex-boylover's children, I went to the cops, and so did they. As before, my family sided with my uncle Don, and not with the children, and my brother told me he had to side with my cousin Ian, who sided with Don. My father is still defended in that house. — I trust that sheds light on how this continues through the generations. So how are my siblings? Dead, nearly dead, and in my case, not dead.

LifeSite: Your book has been available for sale on Amazon in e-book form since mid-December and has spent much of that time in the top 5,000 best-sellers. It now has over one hundred and twenty reviews, most of them with five-star ratings. Has the response to your book surprised you? What have readers been telling you about the book, either personally or in the Amazon reviews?

Moira Greyland: I expected a lynch mob. I was astonished and pleased with the reviews, with the heartfelt empathy of the reviewers, at their insight, and at the consistency of their horror of what my "home" was like.

I have been inured to the horror, because I was used to it. Although I railed against it and despised it, it was "normal" for me. Knowing others thought my experiences were distinctly NOT normal was like a safe hot bath after being dipped in slime, or an old injury finally being cleaned and treated.

There were only two really bad reviews, both by people who had obviously not read the book. Both were removed. A third bad review, which is still up, screamed against my family with tremendous ire and sympathy, but then went off the rails and called me a bigot, as though I came to my conclusions by mail order instead of by observation.

One final note about pedophilia and fandom: when my story broke about my mother in 2014, quite by accident, when I answered a friend's letter and allowed her to print my responses on her blog, nobody in fandom offered to publish my story. The offer came from Vox Day, who also published an expose of pedophilia in fandom called "Safe Space as Rape Room" by Daniel Eness.

Why would a conservative publisher offer me a book contract where fandom argued about the merits of separating the art from the artist? Simple. Although there were many who were outraged at my mother's conduct, most were too star-struck by her and her Revolutionary Ideas to allow the facade to crack before a wider audience. The Old Guard of fandom had to stay sex-positive. Anything else would be admitting the failure of the sexual revolution, and that was a bridge too far.

The issue is not admitting that science fiction fandom has a pedophile problem. The issue is that science fiction fandom denies that pedophilia IS a problem. Although this reality is kept away from straights, Christians, and other stupid, backward people, the common belief is that children allegedly have sexual agency, they supposedly WANT sex, and should be encouraged to make their own decisions.

So then it is up to us. Do we accept a counter-culture that wants our little children to "make their own decisions" when perverted-on by some creep, or do we stand up and absolutely, irrevocably REJECT a culture that regards intolerance as literally its only sin?

The answer should be very obvious.

<https://www.lifesitenews.com/news/interview-daughter-of-famed-sci-fi-author-explains-mothers-gay-pedophile-wo/>

BioClandestine

Protect Your Organization from the Foreign Intelligence Threat

HUGE news from US Counterintelligence!

This is an official statement from the Office of National Counterintelligence Security. This is EXTREMELY juicy. Read it and tell me what they are describing.

The head of US Counterintelligence is ADMITTING THERE IS A DEEP STATE AND WE HAVE BEEN INFILTRATED...

They are confirming all of the major themes we have been pushing. Let's break it down.

A "Global threat" of "state and non-state actors are targeting the United States". Infiltrating "every sector of the US economy". A "diverse and dynamic threat" utilizing "legal and quasi-legal methods, including mergers, acquisitions, investments, joint ventures, partnerships, and talent recruitments programs to acquire US technology and innovation."

The 3rd paragraph is spot on and reads like things we all have been writing for years: "This new form of conflict is not fought on a foreign battlefield, but on our power grids, our computer networks, our LABORATORIES AND RESEARCH FACILITIES, our financial institutions, our healthcare providers, and our federal, state and local tribal governments. This battle will not be won by weapons and warriors, but by public and private sector partnerships and through American dedication and diligence."

HOLY SHIT...

So what does this mean? It confirms that the US government KNOWS it's been infiltrated. But why are they talking about it now? HUNTER BIDEN.

This entire statement is a direct shot at Hunter Biden and his shady dealings in Ukraine. Hunter Biden using quasi-legal partnerships and investment funds (Rosemont Seneca) to use US innovation and technology on foreign soil, to conduct research at biological laboratories and research facilities (Metabiota).

This whole statement covers the entire network of the deep state using the Biden and Kerry family members as proxies to conduct black site biological operations.

This is huge. It means that the good actors in US government are not going to cover for the treasonous activity committed by deep state actors, and it largely confirms that good actors in our government know about this infiltration and therefore have contingencies for this infiltration.

Now, I'm 100% positive they knew about it LONG before they released this statement, but them publicly admitting that we have been infiltrated is a massive step in the direction of justice and confirms essentially all of what we have been preaching for years.

Every aspect of American society was infiltrated by foreign actors and American actors on behalf of a global threat. Folks, the US GOV just confirmed the Deep State is real.

DO YOU STILL BELIEVE IN COINCIDENCES?

Here's an example of a $100 Disney gift card: Minnie's dress looks exactly like a penis, which Mickey happens to be gladly holding.

YEAH, ME NEITHER.

https://www.linkedin.com/posts/national-counterintelligence-and-security-center_protecting-an-organization-is-not-solely-activity-6914579416006156288-GZT1?utm_source=linkedin_share&utm_medium=ios_app

Control energy - Control Nations.

Control food - Control People.

It really IS as simple as that.

Your government is behind every crisis. Inflation, Supply Chain. Energy. Lack of generating. Refusal to increase natural resource extraction.

Famines, pestilence, wars.

All created by the people we pay to serve and protect us.

~CHRIS

HELLO THERE,
MY NAME IS JACOB ROTHSCHILD.

WE OWN NEARLY EVERY
CENTRAL BANK IN THE WORLD.

WE FINANCED BOTH SIDES OF EVERY WAR SINCE NAPOLEON.

WE OWN YOUR NEWS,
THE MEDIA, YOUR OIL,
AND YOUR GOVERNMENT.

You have probably never heard of me.

So Zeifman was a good judge of character?
He would never make it as a Democrat today.

As a 27 year old staff attorney for the House Judiciary Committee during the Watergate investigation, Hillary Rodham was fired by her supervisor, lifelong Democrat Jerry Zeifman.

When asked why Hillary Rodham was fired, Zeifman said in an interview, "Because she was a liar. She was an unethical, dishonest lawyer, she conspired to violate the Constitution, the rules of the House, the rules of the Committee, and the rules of confidentiality."

ters, or that the country is secretly controlled by Jews or gays or feminists or black nationalists or communists or extraterrestrial aliens. But it does not logically follow that all conspiracies are imaginary.

Conspiracy is a legitimate concept in law: the collusion of two or more people pursuing illegal means to effect some illegal or immoral end. People go to jail for committing conspiratorial acts. Conspiracies he ascribed self-interested collusion to powerful people.

At a World Affairs Council meeting in San Francisco, I remarked to a participant that U.S. leaders were pushing hard for the reinstatement of capitalism in the former communist countries. He said, "Do you really think they carry it to that level of conscious intent?" I pointed out it was not a conjecture on my part. They have repeatedly announced their commitment to seeing that "free-market reforms" are introduced in Eastern Europe. Their economic aid is channeled almost exclusively into the private sector. The same policy holds for the monies intended for other countries. Thus, as of the end of 1995, "more than $4.5 million U.S. aid to Haiti has been put on hold because the Aristide government has failed to make progress on a program to privatize state-owned companies" (New York Times 11/25/95).

Those who suffer from conspiracy phobia are fond of saying: "Do you actually think there's a group of people sitting around in a room plotting things?" For some reason that image is assumed to be so patently absurd as to invite only disclaimers. But where else would people of power get together – on park benches or carousels? Indeed, they meet in rooms: corporate boardrooms, Pentagon command rooms, at the Bohemian Grove, in the choice dining rooms at the best restaurants, resorts, hotels, and estates, in the many conference rooms at the White House, the NSA, the CIA, or wherever. And, yes, they consciously plot – though they call it "planning" and "strategizing" – and they do so in great secrecy, often resisting all efforts at public disclosure. No one confabulates and plans more than political and corporate elites and their hired specialists. To make the world safe for those who own it, politically active elements of the owning class have created a national security state that expends billions of dollars and enlists the efforts of vast numbers of people."

— Michael Parenti, Dirty Truths

MICHAEL PARENTI ON CONSPIRACY DENIALISM

are a matter of public record, and some are of real political significance. The Watergate break-in was a conspiracy, as was the Watergate cover-up, which led to Nixon's downfall. Iran-contra was a conspiracy of immense scope, much of it still uncovered. The savings and loan scandal was described by the Justice Department as "a thousand conspiracies of fraud, theft, and bribery," the greatest financial crime in history.

Often the term "conspiracy" is applied dismissively whenever one suggests that people who occupy positions of political and economic power are consciously dedicated to advancing their elite interests. Even when they openly profess their designs, there are those who deny that intent is involved. In 1994, the officers of the Federal Reserve announced they would pursue monetary policies designed to maintain a high level of unemployment in order to safeguard against "overheating" the economy. Like any creditor class, they preferred a deflationary course. When an acquaintance of mine mentioned this to friends, he was greeted skeptically, "Do you think the Fed bankers are deliberately trying to keep people unemployed?" In fact, not only did he think it, it was announced on the financial pages of the press. Still, his friends assumed he was imagining a conspiracy because

The principal reason we live in a world where the majority is unknowingly emotionally manipulated by the oligarchy, and has been since their birth because their parents were also manipulated, is because of the useful idiots of the oligarchy who brandish in an ignorant and judgmental way the terms "conspiracy theory" and "conspiracy theorist".

The sure sign of a walking useful idiot of the oligarchy is anyone who uses the term "conspiracy theorist" as a negative rather than a positive connotation of use for the liberation of humankind from the impending financial-digital slavery to the oligarchy controlled central banks.

Michael Parenti explains the flawed and self destructive thinking of the useful idiots of the central banks. This video should be taught at school, share with your friends, and most importantly, teach the contents of this video to the children, so they don't continue a long line of sleep walking into the arms of digital slavery.

"Almost as an article of faith, some individuals believe that conspiracies are either kooky fantasies or unimportant aberrations. To be sure, wacko conspiracy theories do exist. There are people who believe that the United States has been invaded by a secret United Nations army equipped with black helicop-

HILLARY CLINTON FMR. SECY. OF STATE

@drdmemes1
@grandoldmemes